

Where can I find a job other than the classifieds?

There are a number of places where jobs are available that you may never find without a little resourcefulness. But since you are resourceful, that won't be a problem for you. Below I have listed a number of sources outside of the local newspaper that you might want to try.

Where to Learn About Job Openings

- Personal contacts
- Former employers and colleagues
- State employment service offices
- Federal Government
- Alumni from your alma mater
- National newspapers
- Professional journals
- Trade magazines
- Internet resources
- Professional associations
- Labor unions
- Community agencies
- School career planning and placement offices
- Private employment agencies and career consultants
- Internships

Remember, the government is generally one of the largest employers in a region. Try visiting these sites to review the government jobs in your area.

Official Site for Federal Jobs: <http://www.usajobs.opm.gov/>

Federal/State/Local Government jobs: <http://www.federaljobsearch.com/>

Start now!

Mary Lee Gannon went from being a stay-at-home mother with four children to divorce and devastating poverty and then on to become a newspaper reporter, trade association executive director, public relations consultant, and ultimately a hospital foundation president and CEO. Get Mary Lee's free tips, worksheets and Blog on her website at www.startingovernow.com. Contact Mary Lee or sign up for her newsletter via email at info@startingovernow.com.